Map of housing estate in Tiong Bahru, with an outline of investigation site

Resource 2 for Question 1

Extract of article from Channel News Asia

…Resident Chua Qiu Mei said that over the five years she has lived in Tiong Bahru, she has never used the blue recycling bins because they were often dirty and contaminated with rubbish.

But when REhub started, she began bringing recyclables from both home and work, even encouraging colleagues not to throw away plastic bottles.

“I’ll bring them home from my office (to recycle),” said the 41-year-old dental assistant.

Madam Jia Luan, who has been living in the estate for more than 50 years, said that although she is not tech-savvy, she has been learning to use the smart bin herself and thinks it is a good alternative to the blue bins.

"The blue bin did not really work because people are not willing to follow instructions. They just throw everything inside," said the retiree who is in her 60s.

Mdm Luan said she frequently saw food waste thrown into the blue bins, contaminating the contents and rendering entire batches of recyclables unsuitable for recycling.

Noting that the REhub offers a neater way for residents to recycle, Mdm Luan said: "It’s a good idea, but everybody must play their part."…
